COURSE OBJECTIVES (Part I)
Upon course completion, the registrant will be able to identify and treat rotator cuff impingement syndromes with greater confidence and effectiveness. The registrant will also be able to apply specific clinical tests to help in determining the structure at fault and more importantly the biomechanical cause of the impingement. They will be provided with a number of Physical Therapy treatment options and will learn how to apply “clinical reasoning” in deciding on the most effective treatment approach.

COURSE OBJECTIVES (Part II)
The part II course will enable Physical Therapists to gain more advanced practical knowledge of evaluation of “frozen” shoulders, and persistent rotator cuff pain syndromes, with immediate clinical application

The course will optimize evidence based mobilizations and muscular control retraining for the treatment of impingement syndromes

An important study result that all Physical Therapist who treat “impingement syndromes” need to be aware of: The Serratus Anterior is the most significantly affected scapular muscle in individuals with shoulder impingement syndromes (Ludewig & Cook 2000). Its evaluation is essential and its retraining is highly effective in many patients presenting with persistent impingement syndromes.
Criteria for Acceptance
